

Methodology of Linguistic Research – Introduction and overview

Monday March 15, 2010

9 a.m. – 12 noon

Teachers: Tore Kristiansen and Pia Quist

Department of Scandinavian Research and the LANCHART Centre, Copenhagen University

The first morning session of the course is devoted to the general theory of science as it pertains to research into language and discourse. The purpose is to discuss general aspects of designing and carrying out a research project – and to create a shared awareness of the gamut of theoretical and methodological approaches that are applied in the PhD projects present at the course.

In the interest of establishing a common acquaintance with the participants' projects, we should all carefully read the project descriptions that are to be included with the application for participation; these descriptions will appear on GRADEAST's website from February 15.

We will try to incorporate presentations and discussions of individual projects as far as possible at the 'right' places during the week.
